Harold Ramis, one of Chicago's most iconic filmmakers, dies at 69

Chicago Tribune

Harold Ramis was one of Hollywood's most successful comedy filmmakers when he moved his family from L.A. back to the Chicago area in 1996. His career was still thriving, with "Groundhog Day" acquiring almost instant classic status upon its 1993 release and 1984's "Ghostbusters" ranking among the highest-grossing comedies of all time, but the writer-director wanted to return to the city where he'd launched his career as a Second City performer.

"There's a pride in what I do that other people share because I'm local, which in L.A. is meaningless; no one's local," Ramis said upon the launch of the first movie he directed after his move, the 1999 mobster-in-therapy comedy "Analyze This," another hit. "It's a good thing. I feel like I represent the city in a certain way."

CHICAGO ROOTS

The son of Ruth and Nathan Ramis, who owned Ace Food & Liquor Mart on the West Side before moving the store and family to Rogers Park, Harold Ramis graduated from Senn High School and Washington University in St. Louis. For his first professional writing gig, he contributed freelance arts stories to the Chicago Daily News in the mid-1960s. He also wrote and edited Playboy magazine's "Party Jokes" before and during his Second City days.

Ramis, a longtime North Shore resident, was surrounded by family when he died at 12:53 a.m. Monday from complications of auto-immune inflammatory vasculitis, a rare disease that involves swelling of the blood vessels, his wife Erica Mann Ramis said. He was 69.

Ramis' serious health struggles began in May 2010 with an infection that led to complications related to the autoimmune disease, his wife said. Ramis had to relearn to walk but suffered a relapse of the vasculitis in late 2011, said Laurel Ward, vice president of development at Ramis' Ocean Pictures production company.

Ramis leaves behind a formidable body of work, with writing credits on such enduring comedies as "National Lampoon's Animal House" (which upon its 1978 release catapulted the film career of John Belushi, with whom Ramis acted at Second City), "Stripes" (1981) and "Ghostbusters" (in which Ramis also co-starred) plus such directing efforts as "Caddyshack" (1980), "National Lampoon's Vacation" (1983), "Groundhog Day" and "Analyze This."

Previously he was the first head writer (and a performer) on Second City's ground-breaking TV series "Second City Television (SCTV)" (1976-79). More recently he directed episodes of NBC's "The Office."

Ramis' comedies were often wild, silly and tilting toward anarchy, but they also were cerebral and iconoclastic, with the filmmaker heeding the Second City edict to work at the top of one's intelligence. This combination of smart and gut-bustingly funny led a generation of comedic actors and filmmakers—including Judd Apatow, Jay Roach, Peter Farrelly, Jake Kasdan and Adam Sandler—to cite him as a key inspiration.

"When I was 15, I interviewed Harold for my high school radio station, and he was the person that I wanted to be when I was growing up," said Apatow, who later would cast Ramis as Seth Rogen's father in "Knocked Up" and would produce Ramis' final movie, "Year One." "His work is the reason why so many of us got into comedy. We grew up on 'Second City TV' and 'Ghostbusters,' 'Vacation,' 'Animal House,' 'Stripes,' 'Meatballs' [which Ramis co-wrote]; he literally made every single one of our favorite movies."

So not fare.

When the CTA shuts down portions of the Blue Line this year, replacing train service with shuttle service amid track work, riders who board at the O'Hare station and pay per ride will still have to shell out the $2.75 O'Hare surcharge.

The CTA announced Monday it will close the Blue Line O'Hare branch between the Western and Logan Square stops for seven weekends and the track between the Damen and Western stops for three weekends between March and August.

The first temporary closure is slated for March 21-24. Closures will last from 10 p.m. Friday to 4 a.m. Monday. The shutdowns are part of the first phase of the $492 million, four-year Blue Line overhaul that aims to reduce slow zones and improve 13 stations.

Though shuttle service will be free and available at all shuttered stations to other Blue Line stops, riders without unlimited passes who board at O'Hare will have to pay $5 to ride the Blue Line-even if their Blue Line trip includes a shuttle bus.

"[The CTA] will still have direct connection to and from the airport," CTA spokesman Brian Steele said. "The travel time will still be very competitive compared to other options out there."

The CTA a year ago introduced the $2.75 surcharge at O'Hare-the only station that Riders who don't have unlimited passes pay $5 for trips that originate from O'Hare.

Compare that fare with what was offered during the five-month Red Line shutdown on the South Side from May to October, the CTA offered free shuttle service to the Gar-

The agency also gave a 50-cent discount on bus rides along routes south of 63rd Street.

"The two projects are completely different in scope and duration," Steele said. "[The Red Line overhaul] was going to pose five months of inconvenience for customers. We wanted to provide them something to offset that."

STATIONARY A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note This week: Addison Blue Line

The Addison stop soon will see a much-needed addition. As part of the CTA's four-year Blue Line overhaul plan that begins this year, the Irving Park station will get an elevator to make it accessible for riders with disabilities. CTA workers are also slated to repair damaged concrete at the platform's edge. But there's more work to be done. The Active Transportation Alliance last year solicited suggestions on how to improve the Addison stop. The alliance found the station could use better bike and pedestrian access, additional platform heat lamps and a covered area for riders to wait for the westbound No. 152 Addison bus. Alliance transit campaign coordinator Brenna Conway said local and state officials have been working with the alliance to move forward on some of these proposals. Next up: 63rd Red Line

More cyclists are recording their rides in case of accident

Chicago Tribune

Although she hasn't been in a bicycle accident, Kathleen King has had her share of close calls on the lakefront path she rides between her home in Andersonville and her office in the Loop.

Most automobile drivers are courteous, but some can get aggressive, she said. That is why her husband suggested she start filming her commute in case she was in an accident. She bought a $100 camera, joining a growing number of bicyclists who are strapping video cameras-commonly referred to as "bike cams"-to their helmets or handle bars to document their commute.

Tom McNeff, the store manager at the Sports Authority on LaSalle Street in Chicago, said personal cameras from the GoPro line are among the store's most popular sporting goods items.

Sales of the high-definition personal cameras increased significantly in the past year or so, peaking during the recent holidays, McNeff said. The cameras also can capture extreme sports and family outings, which also likely contribute to their popularity.

The use of bicycle cameras comes at the nexus of intersecting trends.

Chicago has become more bicycle-friendly, said Jason Jenkins, education specialist and crash support programs manager at the Active Transportation Alliance.

Over the past 20 years, Chicago added more than 170 miles of standard bike lanes and marked shared lanes. In 2013 the city

Tom Lemke wears a helmet-mounted GoPro camera as he stops in Daley Plaza during his morning commute last month. MICHAEL TERCHATRIBUNE launched the bike share program Divvy that has about 400 stations.

At the same time, the city is increasing the use of cameras to manage traffic infractions such as speeding and running red lights. Now bicyclists are embracing the opportunity to police their own safety.

Attorneys say the cameras could be useful in the event of an accident but that bicyclists should use the cameras with caution.

Thomas Pakenas, a principal attorney at Illinois Bike Attorneys and an avid cyclist, deals with about 40 bike crash cases a year.

Although he hasn't had a case in which someone brought in *bike cam" video, he said he's seen devices like GoPro gain popularity in recent years as technology becomes more accessible and affordable.

"It's kind of like insurance. You never need insurance-until something happens," said Pakenas, who occasionally uses his nearly $300 GoPro camera for long-distance commutes.

Cyclists should be careful to follow the rules of the road because video footage could capture their own faults, making their case worse, Pakenas said.

"If you know you're recording it, it makes the bicycle rider more motivated to act in a safe manner because, you know, the tape can go both ways," Pakenas said.

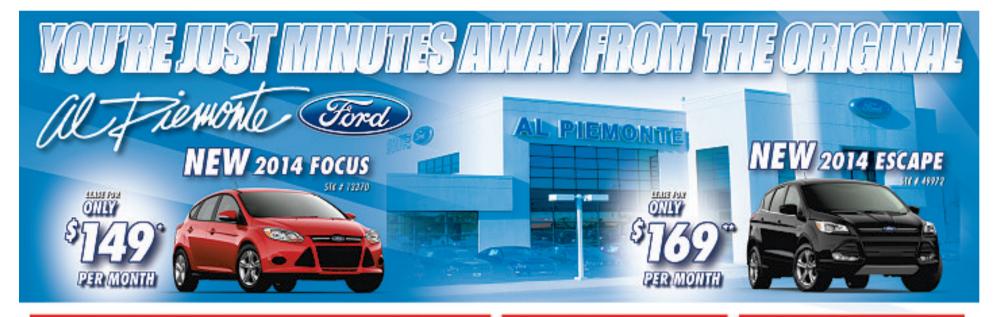

You can take your analogy and shove it right up your [bleep], judge."

Iraq, Iran sign arms deal

Iran has signed a deal to sell Iraq arms and ammunition worth $195 million, according to documents seen by Reuters-a move that would break a U.N. embargo on weapons sales by Tehran.

The agreement was reached at the end of November, the documents showed, just weeks after Irag's Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki returned from lobbying the Obama administration in Washington for extra weapons to fight al-Qaida-linked militants.

Some in Washington are nervous about providing sensitive U.S. military equipment to a country they worry is becoming too close to Iran, Several Iraqi lawmakers said Maliki had made the deal because he was fed up with delays in U.S. arms deliveries.

A spokesman for the Iraqi prime minister looking into the reports.

would not confirm or deny the sale, but said such a deal would be understandable given Iraq's current security troubles.

"We are launching a war against terrorism and we want to win this war. Nothing prevents us from buying arms and ammunition from any party and it's only ammunition helping us to fight terrorists," said the spokesman, Ali Mussawi.

The Iranian government denied any knowledge of a deal to sell arms to Iraq. It would be the first official arms deal between Shi'ite Iran and Iraq's Shi'ite-led government and would highlight the growing bond between them in the two years since the departure of U.S. troops from Iraq.

The U.S. State Department said it was

"If true, this would raise serious concerns," State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki told a news briefing.

"Any transfer of arms from Iran to a third country is in direct violation of UNSCR 1747. We are seeking clarification on the matter from the government of Iraq and to ensure that Iraqi officials understand the limits that international law places on arms trade with Iran," Psaki said, referring to the U.N. resolution that imposed an arms embargo on Iran.

Asked at the Washington briefing if the deal could have come about due to Iraqi frustration at the slowness of U.S. deliveries, Psaki said the United States was committed to supporting Iraq and had provided it with more than $15 billion in military and security equipment, services and training.

U.S. Army to shrink to pre-WWII levels

The Pentagon said Monday it would shrink the U.S. Army to pre-World War II levels, eliminate the popular A-10 aircraft and reduce military benefits in order to meet 2015 spending caps, setting up an electionyear fight with the Congress over national defense priorities.

Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel, previewing the Pentagon's ideas on how to adapt to government belt-tightening, said the defense budget due out next week would be the first to look beyond 13 years of conflict, shifting away from long-term ground wars like Iraq and Afghanistan.

He cautioned, however, that the country needed to be clear-eyed about the risks posed by lower budget levels, which would challenge the Pentagon to field a smaller yet well-trained force that could cope with any adversary, but might not be able to respond simultaneously to multiple conflicts.

10 ways to cure your Olympics hangover

By Emily Brown | REDEYE

So the 2014 Winter Olympics are over, and you're probably moping a lot. When you get home, you can't flop on your couch and flip on the sport of the moment anymore. The updates aren't on TV every day, and your Twitter feed seemingly is bare without news of who won medals.

What are you going to do without all that drama? Unfortunately, the scandals, upsets, comebacks and record-breaking stories of the Games are gone for the next two years. On the bright side, you can get all those elements right here in Chicago. You just have to know where to look.

ENBROWN@TRIBUNE.COM | @EMILY_BROWN88

If you're missing Olympic hockey

Then it's a good thing the NHL is back, and so are the Blackhawks! Three gold medalists and three silver medalists highlight the Hawks' roster, and we suspect Team USA's Patrick Kane will have to deal with at least a little boasting in the locker room. The team will be back on the ice in New York against the Rangers on Thursday, and they play Saturday against Pittsburgh at Soldier Field.

If you miss the ease of always having something to watch

Then that's what Netflix is for! Whether it's 3 in the morning or you just came home from work, pull up the Web and catch up on "House of Cards."

If you're missing the grandeur of the opening and closing ceremonies

Then you're lucky (see what we did there?) you live in Chicago. St. Patrick's Day is coming up next month, and it's already time to start getting your green gear together. Between seeing the Chicago River dyed green and the parade, there's barely enough time for all the bar-hopping.

Weir

If you're missing figure skating fashion, or just Johnny Weir's outfits

Then you'll appreciate the Academy Awards' red carpet. On Sunday, stars will gather before the Oscars to show off their fashion choices. You also can catch up on the nominated movies in your spare time.

If you're missing ice dancing Then be sure to go ice skating at Millennium Park before the rink closes for the season March 9. Try some of the moves you saw from American gold medalists Meryl Davis and Charlie White-just wear a helmet.

missing the scandals

You can get your dose of controversy when "Scandal" returns Thursday. In fact, most of your favorite shows that were on Olympic hiatus are back this week. You can always count on a reality show or prime-time drama to bring scandal into your life.

GETTY IMAGES AND TRIBUNE PHOTOS

If years to craw hard basing first

If you miss curling and all the strategy involved Then use your improved strategizing skills to craft your March Madness bracket.

March arrives this weekend, and for college basketball fans, that means the tournament. Research every team, pick up on a few "Cinderella stories," and you've got a winning bracket. Hopefully.

If you miss the lifechanging stories such as 18-year-old Mikaela Shiffrin winning gold

Then pick up John Feinstein's latest novel, "Where Nobody Knows Your Name: Life in the Minor Leagues of Baseball." Superstars have to start somewhere, right?

If you miss the rivalries between countries and cheering on Team USA like it's your job

Then see "Captain America: The Winter Soldier," which comes out April 4. Rooting for your country is obviously something you're extremely passionate about. Were you keeping track of the medal race? Then you're an American superfan. Any movie with "America" in the title is for you.

7 If you're missing speedskating

Then check out some NASCAR or NHRA drag racing. Both seasons are underway. With speeds up to 190 mph in NASCAR and 300 mph in a top fuel dragster (NHRA), there's plenty of speed to satisfy your need for thrills.

THE DIGIT 1 MILLION

NASCAR driver Danica Patrick is in a class by herself when it comes to Twitter followers: She recently passed the 1 million mark. And even though she's never won a Sprint Cup race, she's way ahead of the driver with the next highest total, Jimmie Johnson with

Dunn hearts Oscar

Adam Dunn may be Oscars-bound. The White Sox slugger is an investor in the production company that made "Dallas Buyers Club," a best picture nominee. Dunn also had a bit role as a bartender in the film and may attend Sunday's ceremony. "I mean, realistically, how many times do you get to do somethina like this?" he said Monday.

Brian McBride GETTY IMAGES FILE

Two soccer legends with strong Chicago ties were named to the National Soccer Hall of Fame's Class of 2014 on Monday.

Chicago-area native Brian McBride was among three honorees announced. Joining McBride was Bob Bradley, the Fire's founding coach, who later guided the U.S. men's national team. Former women's national team midfielder Kristine Lilly also will be inducted.

McBride, an Arlington Heights native, scored 30 goals with the U.S. national team between 1993 and 2006. He closed his career with the Fire (2008-10).

"My first reaction after hearing about this was I got chills," he said in a statement. "I'm just honored to be thought of in this light by my peers and the press."

Bradley coached the Fire from its inaugural 1998 season through 2002, winning an MLS Cup in his first season.

BRINGING THE HEAT

You've gotta hand it to NBC: The network knows how to play to a Chicago crowd.

The network announced Monday that Blackhawks defensemen Duncan Keith and Brent Seabrook will make guest appearances in Tuesday's episode of "Chicago Fire."

The episode is titled "Virgin Skin," though there's no word on whether Keith and Seabrook will keep their shirts on for their appearances.

What we do know comes from a statement from NBC and the NHL.

"Shay (Lauren German) gets an unusual tip from Seabrook and Keith, friends of Clarke (Jeff Hephner), who stop by Molly's, the local bar that is co-owned by several members from firehouse 51."

Why now? Because the Blackhawks play Pittsburgh at Soldier Field on Saturday, of course. The game will also be mentioned in the episode.

'Magic Mike' vanishing act?

There are conflicting reports as to why Fire forward Mike Magee has virtually disappeared from training camp. The official word is he's taking personal time off. However, a Daily Herald report suggests Major League Soccer's most valuable player may be holding out for an improved contract.

The 29-year-old forward scored 21 goals last season, including 15 for the Fire. The MLS Player's Union said Magee had a base salary of $185,000 and guaranteed compensation of $191,166 in 2013. He was the team's 10th-highest-salaried player last year, according to union data.

WHAT'S COOKIN'?

Two insiders break down rising stars in country

By Ernest Wilkins

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Despite country music's recent surge in popularity, the uninitiated still may not know whom to listen to outside of, say, Carrie Underwood. RedEye reached out to Billboard magazine's Andrew Hampp and Annie Reuter, a New York-based writer focusing on country music for outlets like CBS radio, via phone for their tips on navigating the modern country scene.

On Kacey Musgraves: "She's an anomaly. She's taking off in the coasts and sings about more liberal-minded subjects. She's kind of a gateway drug in regards to modern country music," Hampp said. Reuter adds, "She's bringing taboo topics to the forefront with songs like 'Follow Your Arrow.' That's why she's touring with folks like Katy Perry. She connects with the pop crowd as much as the country crowd."

And yet: Hampp doesn't believe newer acts like Musgraves have taken hold in Nashville, Tenn., the genre's home base. "Country still depends on radio play more than other genres," he said. "Artists still have to adhere to that traditional format to get airplay and popularity. Even Taylor Swift had to make a country version of "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together' because the song was leaning too pop."

Men and more men: "If you look at our country airplay chart right now, there's only one woman in the Top 25. Otherwise, it's all males. With there being so many solo male artists in country singing about trucks, girls or beer, it can be hard to differentiate between them," Hampp said.

Names to watch out for: Reuter recommends Brandy Clark, Brett Eldredge ("He's a good gateway for folks getting into country. Very soulful, almost bluesy.") and Kip Moore, who along with Musgraves opens for Lady Antebellum on Wednesday at Allstate Arena. Hampp recommends Dan + Shay, who he notes share management with Justin Bieber and are writing songs for the new Rascal Flatts album.

ERWILKINS@TRIBUNE.COM | @ERNESTWILKINS

Search "Kacey Musgraves Nashville Star" on YouTube and you'll find the recent Grammy winner performing as a contestant on USA's now-defunct singing contest in 2007. "The plan for my future," she sings on "Halfway to Memphis," "is putting you in my past."

Taylor

Since the country singer has effectively crossed over into the mainstream since the release of her fantastic 2013 album "Same Trailer Different Park," Musgraves should practice what she preaches and keep looking forward. Here's what we think the 25-year-old Texas native (opening for Lady Antebellum on Wednesday at Allstate Arena and joining Katy Perry's arena tour later this year) should do.

BE A GENUINE ARTICLE

At first, we really believed that Taylor Swift was just really, really shocked and excited to be winning huge awards. But now, that "OH MY GOSH, YOU GUYS" face is the expression that launched a thousand memes. By all means, Musgraves should be excited about her career—but she always should be careful to react to situations naturally. D.M.

EMBRACE CONTROVERSY

Not surprisingly, many conservative country fans balk at the content of "Follow Your Arrow," which, among other liberal opinions, has an open-minded view of sexuality and drug use. Musgraves has said that appealing to everyone means you're not doing much of anything, and she's right; her defiance is part of what makes her significant. M.P.

REJECT CLICHES RATHER THAN REINVENTING THEM

With songs like "Merry Go 'Round," Musgraves has acknowledged country music and small-town cliches and then put her fresh, sarcastic twist on them. Next she can look past these elements and really carve out her own niche without commenting on anyone else's. M.P.

MINIMIZE WORDPLAY

Though Musgraves has a clever, insightful way with words, some of her lyrics (primarily on "Silver Lining") come a little close to Owl City-esque cutesiness for comfort. Again: Owl City is terrible, and KM is awesome. She just needs to be careful. M.P.

EXPAND YOUR REACH

A whole new audience was exposed to Musgraves' talent when "Undermine," a song she co-wrote with Trent Dabbs, was sung by Juliette Barnes (Hayden Panettiere) on "Nashville." Musgraves should look for other TV shows and movies in need of a pinch of her sarcastic country

- flair. D.M.

SEEK OUT MENTORS

Country music is home to one of the grandest traditions of them all—the Grand Ole Opry, a place where musicians young and old come together to share their passion. Musgraves already has taken the stage there to perform her own hits and covers like Elvis Presley's "Are You Lonesome Tonight?," but she should use her status as a guest artist to wander the halls and connect with the Opry's stable of legends. D.M.

STUDY MORE CHARACTERS

"Blowin' Smoke" is such a spot-on portrait of life-changing procrastination that I can't help but wonder what other stories Musgraves, whose songs aren't all as rich as "Smoke" or "Keep it to Yourself," has up her sleeve. Keep 'em coming. M.P.

GET YOUR HEART BROKEN

Do it a lot. Do it with non-famous people. Do it with a few famous people. But there's nothing like heartbreak to fuel the flames of a good country song, whether it's an angry ode to revenge or a tear-streaked ballad. Just don't name names, OK? D.M.

DO WHATEVER YOU WANT

A pop-leaning country artist will always get commentary like this tweet recently sent to Musgraves: "You need to stop making pop songs and make real country." Yeah, yeah. Deliver great songs, gal, and listeners can think what they think. M.P.

KEEP IT COUNTRY

While I agree with Matt that Musgraves should follow her heart to deliver quality music, if she's going to label herself "country," she's gotta keep that twang. I think we'd all agree that the dubstep drops on Taylor Swift's "I Knew You Were Trouble" are not even remotely Nashville, but there sits "Red" on the country shelf. D.M.

KEEPING YOU PLUGGED IN TO TODAY'S MOST BUZZWORTHY MUSIC

Oxymoron Schoolboy Q

By Ernest Wilkins REDEYE SOUND BOARD From "Gangsta," his album-opening declaration of self, to razor-sharp barbs like, "[Bleep] rap, my [bleep] real," Schoolboy O wants it known that he's not here for any of

has become com-

the foolishness that

mon in modern rap. On "Oxymoron," the L.A. rapper's major-label debut, there are no fantasy-level stories of wealth and no boasts of living on a boat, where he wears tank tops from designers you've never heard of and a butler serves him croissants. He's here for that #realtalk, thank you very much.

With his third album, O deftly navigates the lane between having fun and wanting to [bleep] you up—making him a natural descendant of West Coast acts like DJ Quik and Kurupt from Tha Dogg Pound (who appears on Q's "The Purge"), who interwove party tales with the rawness of life in the hood. Where labelmate Kendrick Lamar's heralded "good kid, m.AA.d. city" takes a big-picture look at the neighborhood, however, Q's unfiltered storytelling contains a pure, first-person perspective. He discusses roaches in his cereal and his uncle bribing Q to take his drug tests because the uncle was on crack on "Hoover Street"; on "Prescription/Oxymoron," we hear Q's daughter asking him if he's OK and pleading with him to wake up. Throughout "Oxymoron" is woven a haunting reminder that drug addiction doesn't just hurt the user.

It also should be noted that Schoolboy Q

SEE HIM LIVE IN CONCERT

April 22 at Metro

does a lot with his voice, switching from aggressive machine gun on "Break the Bank" to velvet pillow on "Grooveline Pt. 2." Sonically, this is a well-constructed piece of work, with Chicago-native production duo Nex & Rio providing two tracks and holding their own alongside bigger names like Pharrell and Tyler, the Creator. Speaking of Chicago, BJ the Chicago Kid's smooth delivery almost steals the show on "Studio."

One minor quibble: the album's sequencing. It can be jarring to switch from party song to depressed drug ballad to chestthumping bravado. Then again, maybe that's the point. With a lot of buzz behind him, Schoolboy Q easily could have made a bunch of poppy records catering to the suburbs. Instead, he made a triumph for the streets and the people who inhabit them—something more rappers should try once in a while.

New rap video has River North style

Tribute to J Dilla gets an assist from American Junkie

By Luis Gomez | TRIBUNE

It's not every day a hip-hop video films in the River North area.

A Tribe Called Ouest rapper Phife Dawg shot part of his music video for "Dear Dilla"-a tribute to rapper and producer J Dilla, who passed away in 2006 due to a blood disease—at American Junkie's upstairs club, Attic, in November. Phife can be seen performing in front of a crowd at Attic near the end of the video.

"We knew we were going to shoot in Chicago because my team and home studio are based here." the video's director. Konee Rok, said over email Thursday. "I considered a few different places for the

I had filmed a show at American Junkie for Lollapalooza that summer, so I was familiar with the layout. And as it turned out. I knew the person in charge of booking well [Chris Calip]. That made negotiations fluid and gave us a lot of freedom and comfort that we'd be able to achieve what we wanted for the shoot."

In addition to Chicago, the video also filmed two days in J Dilla's hometown of Detroit. "Dear Dilla" is the first single off of Phife's "MUTTYmorPHosis." The full-length studio album, which will be Phife's first solo album since 2000's "Ventilation: Da LP." still doesn't have a release date

Lily Allen is starting an album revolution

By Ernest Wilkins | REDEYE

All haif the new monarch? On Friday, Lify Allen announced on "The Graham Norton Show" that she was going for broke and naming her next album "Sheezus." (You know, like the Kanye album? Get it? GET IT?) Instead of rolling our eyes and calling it the hacklest move since "Honky Tonk Badonkadonk," we'd like to offer some alternate she-flavored album titles. (Wow, that sounds, um, intimate. Moving on ...)

The fantastic Wes Anderson

The Music Box Theatre is pulling out all the stops in advance of the March 14 premiere of Wes Anderson's newest film, "The Grand Budapest Hotel." In addition to screening all of the director's films, starting with "Bottle Rocket," from Friday through March 6, the Lakeview theater also will host an advance screening of "Budapest" at 4 p.m. Saturday, followed by a Q&A session with the director. Attendees can begin RSVPing for free entrance to Saturday's event at noon Tuesday, but seating is on a first-come, first-served basis, so admittance is not guaranteed.

THE QUOTE

It's almost this badge of honor or something."

-"Looking" star Scott Bakula, to Vulture, on his mustache, Bakula said he had grown the 'stache to fit in on a trip to Egypt, and the show asked him to keep it.

Pick a presenter, any presenter

To give you the full list of famous folks who are presenting at the Oscars on Sunday, we'd have to reserve this entire page. Instead, here are some people we think you might care about: Amy Adams, Kristen Bell, Benedict Cumberbatch, Viola Davis, Zac Efron, Jamie Foxx, Andrew Garfield, Joseph Gordon-Levitt, Anne Hathaway, Chris Hemsworth, Michael B. Jordan, Anna Kendrick, Jennifer Lawrence, Matthew McConaughey, Gabourey Sidibe, Will Smith, Kevin Spacey, Jason Sudeikis, Channing Tatum, Kerry Washington and Emma Watson, AND THAT'S ONLY SOME OF THEM.
